

Mark Fox, Professor of Medicine and Pediatrics; Associate Dean and Regional Campus Director, Indiana University School of Medicine

Mark D. Fox, M.D., Ph.D., M.P.H. is a physician, ethicist, public health professional, and academic leader with more than two decades of experience advancing community-based medical education, community health, and health equity. He is Professor of Medicine and Pediatrics at the Indiana University School of Medicine and serves as Associate Dean and Regional Campus Director for both the Indiana University School of Medicine – South Bend and the Indiana University School of Medicine – Northwest – Gary campuses.

Throughout his career, Dr. Fox has sought to advance health equity, emphasizing the connections among medical education and training, public health, and care for under-resourced populations. Before joining Indiana

University in 2015, he held several leadership roles at the University of Oklahoma School of Community Medicine in Tulsa, where he held the Julian Rothbaum Chair in Community Health Research. He held concurrent roles as Associate Dean for Community Health and Associate Dean for Research Development. His work has included the development and support of community-engaged approaches to medical education and health care, with particular attention to uninsured individuals, people experiencing homelessness, Native American communities, and other under-resourced populations.

Dr. Fox's interdisciplinary training reflects the breadth of his academic and professional interests. He earned his M.D. and Ph.D. in Religion, Ethics, and Society from Vanderbilt University and completed residency training in Internal Medicine and Pediatrics at the University of Rochester School of Medicine and Dentistry. At Rochester, he also completed fellowship training in cardiovascular epidemiology and preventive cardiology and earned an M.P.H. in Clinical Investigation. His scholarship spans medical ethics, health equity, community and public health, and transplantation policy.

In addition to his medical school leadership responsibilities, Dr. Fox holds adjunct faculty appointments at the University of Notre Dame and the Richard M. Fairbanks

School of Public Health at Indiana University Indianapolis. Across his administrative, educational, scholarly, and community roles, he has emphasized collaboration across disciplines and institutions as well as the responsibility of academic medicine to the communities it serves. His work is guided by a commitment to preparing future physicians who excel in scientific rigor, compassionate care, ethical leadership, and service to their communities.